Government Relations

Don't let budget shortfall distract from important policy work

By David C. Olson

The projected shortfall in the state's general fund promises to dominate debate at the 2009 Legislature. Balancing the budget without raising the cost of doing business in Minnesota is the top priority of the Minnesota Chamber of Commerce's agenda as well. This is absolutely the wrong time to raise taxes on Minnesotans as we strive to keep the state an attractive place to create and retain jobs.

At the same time, legislators must not miss an opportunity to address policy that is necessary to keep this state's economy strong. The Minnesota Chamber is advancing an aggressive agenda on several other fronts, too. Workforce, transportation, climate change, energy and health care will demand the attention of the Minnesota Chamber and our local chamber partners across the state.

Among our key issues:

- Workforce – Businesses need an adequate supply of skilled workers to compete in today's global economy. We will advance reforms in the K-12 public education system that focus on three areas – closing the achievement gap, global competition and fiscal accountability.
- Transportation efficiency – Taxpayers deserve the greatest value for every dollar spent on the state's infrastructure. We support greater flexibility in mandates enacted in the 2008 transportation funding bill and will promote more balanced investment of new revenues. We continue our work with the Strategic Management and Operations Task Force to ensure that both current and new transportation dollars are spent efficiently.

- Climate change – Lawmakers should not pass any state or regional cap-and-trade policy. Emissions from Minnesota contribute only 0.37 percent of manmade global greenhouse gas emissions. If Minnesota "goes alone" on adopting restrictions, it does so at great risk of losing jobs and an extremely high probability that we'll not make a dent in this global problem. The issue needs to be addressed on the national and international levels.
- Nuclear power – Minnesota is among the minority of states where it is illegal to even consider additional generation of nuclear power. We must change the existing state law so nuclear power is an option for generation of additional and necessary base-load for our homes and businesses.
- Health care – The Legislature took the first steps toward significant health care reform in 2008. We must make sure these initiatives are implemented and produce measurable improvements in controlling costs and improving quality of care.

We look forward once again to protecting your interests in St. Paul, especially during these tough economic times. The Minnesota Chamber is your full-time government affairs team so you can devote your full time to running your businesses.

Finally, the Minnesota Chamber is working to help policy-makers identify areas of the budget where we can reduce spending or restructure programs to resolve the budget deficit. Please don't hesitate to share your suggestions as well by sending your ideas to Tom Hesse at these@mnchamber.com.

Employee Free Choice Act (also known as the Card Check bill)

I want you all to be aware of a recently proposed Act being promoted by Labor Unions called the Card Check Bill. Below is a brief description of the intentions of this bill. More importantly, the Chamber Board would like to you to know that we have voted unanimously to oppose this bill. As a result, the Edina Chamber of Commerce has become a member of Minnesota Business Leaders and we will participate at Level 2. Level Two participants oppose Card Check and agree to adopt a board resolution, communicate with their general membership through newsletter articles, e-news updates, etc, and provide signature to joint letter for delivery to Minnesota's congressional delegation.

What is the Card Check Bill? How does it work?

The principle purpose of the Card Check Bill is to make it easier for unions to organize. Under current law, if union organizers collect signatures from at least 30 percent of the employees in a bargaining unit, the federal National Labor Relations Board will hold an election to determine whether to certify the union.

This process, established and refined through decades of experience, carefully balances the interests of employees, unions, and employers in order to ensure that workers can hear all sides and then make up their minds and vote in private, without intimidation or coercion. Today a majority of elections are held within 39 days and a majority of union elections are won by organized labor.

Because union density has dropped so low (to about 7.5 percent in the private sector), organized labor is seeking to change the rules and make it easier to organize. The card check bill would do just that – instead of determining whether a union would be certified through a federally-supervised secret ballot election, the union would be certified the moment it collected a majority of signed authorization cards.

The Card Check Bill would therefore eliminate the campaign period and the legal requirements that regulate it, not to mention eliminating the ability of employees to make an informed decision in private. Instead, employee decisions on unionization would be made in front of union organizers greatly increasing the opportunity for coercion and pressure in the union organizing process.

A secondary, and less well known, purpose of the bill is to amend collective bargaining law so that when a union is recognized for the first time government arbitrators will set all the terms and conditions of the union contract unless the union and the employer can meet unrealistic timelines. Today, the law requires that the parties bargain in good faith and recognizes that the union, representing workers, and the employer are in the best position to determine whether an agreement is acceptable and whether compromising on one goal in order to achieve another is acceptable.

The Card Check Bill's mandatory interest arbitration provisions would remove any incentive for the employer or the union to adopt realistic bargaining positions, as each would be posturing for the arbitrator, and would give the arbitrator control of the most basic business decisions. It would also deny employees the right to vote on ratification of the contract.

Finally, the Card Check Bill would increase penalties for employers, but not for unions or others, who violate union organizing laws.

As a member of Minnesota Business Leaders, [Insert Organization Name] believes that the Employee Free Choice Act would have a particularly devastating impact on small employers who, as the primary source for new jobs, would be counted on to reverse the current economic downturn.

You may hear that the EFCA should be considered in the context of helping to revive the economy. This bill is an awful idea in good economic times and a catastrophic idea in the difficult economic times now upon us.

Edina Fire Department facilitates friendly wager, helps VEAP

Since 1984, the Edina Fire Department has offered up its fire station as a year-round collection site for non-perishable food donations to VEAP, a non-profit agency serving low-income, elderly and disabled persons in Bloomington, Edina, Richfield and South Minneapolis. During the holiday season, the Fire Department also collects new, unwrapped toys for VEAP that can be distributed to less fortunate children.

This year, the Fire Department was approached with a special request by two Edina bus drivers. Howie Newell and Jackie Washburn had each challenged their riders -- students from Valley View Middle School -- to bring in more non-perishable donations than their counterparts over the course of one week. The food collection culminated on Friday, Dec. 12, when the drivers and students brought their donations to Fire Station No. 1 to be judged by Fire Chief Marty Scheerer. Newell was so confident that his bus would come away victorious that he agreed to don a pink sun dress and matching derby hat if he lost.

Once the students had unloaded all of the food from their busses, and Howell revealed his "insurance policy," -- a pick-up box full of additional food donations, Scheerer declared the competition a tie. Being a good sport, Howell made his fashion statement anyway, even though he didn't "lose" the bet.

The Edina Fire Department collects non-perishable food donations for VEAP year-round at Fire Station No. 1, 6250 Tracy Ave.
